Mental Health

Narrative Matters

These articles are both submissions and directly commissioned papers. They will be peer-reviewed. The articles should be on a humanities topic relevant to those working in child and adolescent mental health. The topics can include aspects of child mental health service history; representations of abnormal mental states or mental illness in children and teenagers in film, literature or drama; depictions of child mental health clinicians within popular culture; ethical dilemmas in the specialty. Interest and originality are valued. If in doubt, please contact the section editor: Gordon.Bates@nhs.net

The essays should be between 1000 and 1500 words and written for an audience of child mental health professionals. For publishing reasons, there is an upper limit of 7 references for the article. Additional references may be given in the text if necessary.
