Engaging with the children of parents with mental illness to increase their resilience
Mental illness in a parent can have a devastating impact on a child's growth development and emotional life, as well as future mental health, BUT it does not have to. Discover more on this Masterclass, in partnership with Our Time.

About the day

The WHO has stated that this as a major public health issue across the globe. ACE research identifies PMI as one of the 10 most significant adversities and risk factors for children and young people's mental wellbeing.

Learning Outcomes

- Understand the nature and prevalence of the impact of parental mental illness
- Clarity about the impact of not intervening, and the positive impact of intervening as early as possible
- Increase awareness of how to build resilience in affected children – a conceptual model of mental illness that both the children and parents can understand together
- Recognise the importance of protecting the child's thinking from the disordered aspects of their parents' thinking
- Appreciate the power of explanation and understanding as a protective intervention
- Gain a new model of explanation as well as skills and confidence in talking to children and young people about mental illness
